Conceptual Design of the Programme of Study

Bonn is already renowned for being one of the leading locations for non-governmental organisations (NGOs) worldwide. The new programme of study leading to the degree of Master of Business Administration in NGO Management has been introduced by the Department of Business Administration in Rheinbach. The programme is established in the vicinity of the great number of UN organisations, hundreds of NGOs and their associations as well as international schools and scientific organisations. Its purpose is to look at organisations engaged in the areas of international development cooperation, environmental protection and health from the point of view of Business Administration.

The programme comprises three semesters (18 months), the first two of which are intended for extra-occupational studies with compulsory attendance. The third semester is exclusively intended for the transfer project and for writing the master's thesis.

Target Group

The MBA programme is primarily intended for employees who have been engaged abroad as engineers, natural or social scientists, for instance, and who are now planning to enter managerial positions in NGOs. Furthermore, this offer is designed for employees at NGOs who wish to acquire management skills to further their careers. However, it is also designed for employees at private companies who, for instance, wish for professional advancement in the area of Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) or in Marketing and Corporate Communication.

The degree course is also aimed at foreign students in particular who, after having completed their first course of study, are seeking to spend a study period abroad in this country and to establish contact with the local NGOs in order to cooperate with them after having returned to their home countries. Scholarships, among other things, are available for this purpose.

Advisory Committee

At the work level the Advisory Committee supports the institute's work by:

- Giving overviews of the experience gained in the course of the programme of study
- Discussing current developments
- Defining tasks and projects
- Supporting practical training periods, transfer projects and master theses
- Relating the students' interests and those of all other persons involved to professional practice

The Advisory Committee consists of interested representatives from NGOs, ministries, companies, universities and politics and is made up on the invitation of the Heads of the MBA programme.

Executive Advisory Board

An Executive Advisory Board has been established to provide advice to the Heads of the MBA programme on basic subject-related and interdisciplinary issues of the scientific work programme as well as national and international cooperation.

The duties of the Executive Advisory Board include the following in particular:

- Providing advice to the Heads of the MBA programme on long-term research and development planning and on the strategic orientation of the further-education programme.
- Regular assessment, in collaboration with the Heads of the MBA programme, of the research and tuition performance attained by this programme.

The Executive Advisory Board consists of six to twelve independent, internationally renowned and working scientists, senior managers at public and private organisations or other experts.
